'Dead' gander's return is no flight of fancy!

By Gina Lorraine Murray

As Spiritualists, we are privileged to know that just like humans, animals also survive death and often return to their human companions after passing on.

Below, medium Gina Lorraine Murray tells her psychic story and cites just a few of the pets who have returned through her gift including a much-loved "dead" goose.

I AM 51 years young later this month and share my life with Toby (a human), along with Hungarian Vizslas Rubin and Ilka, working sheepdogs Gwen and Bryn, Balinte, Matty, Aalaya and Marble... and that's not to forget farm cats, Ginger puss, Blackie, Jack and Patrick, two geese called CB and Fizz, Scrumpy the horse and Minnie, a pony.

We all live not far from the Brecon Beacons in stunning countryside, although I was born and brought up in Somerset and then spent my teenage years and early adult life in the New Forest.

I've been incredibly fortunate to have many experiences with animals from an early age. My mother was often sent animals from the local vets that needed healing and rehabilitation, as she is an incredible healer.

My first career was with horses before I went on to study complementary health practices, which I have often used on animals – and even a fifteen-foot python.

Additionally, for many years, I've been treating people mainly with massage, reflexology, colonic hydrotherapy, spiritual healing, etc.

I cannot remember the first mediumship I did with animals, as I have been able to see and feel them on the Other Side for many years.

However, I had been studying animal communication and asked friends to send me photos of various pets, so I could practise. A few days later a selection of photos arrived.

Some of the animals I had met and knew a little about. One photo showed a ginger cat. I sat quietly to tune in and the next thing I knew I could see this cat beside me.

He then stated that he had passed over from cancer and made me feel it in my stomach area. I will admit I was convinced

I had got this wrong.

Anyway, he continued giving me images of his owner's home and all she had done for him, and even let me know that he was with an elderly lady who had not long passed over.

I called my friends convinced I had gone well off track. However, it turned out it was all correct and they had deliberately put the photo in of this cat, as they were sure I could do it.

I then asked lots of other friends to send me photos of their pets that had passed on. Initially, I guess I was working from a psychometry angle, but then started to notice that I was becoming more aware of animals sitting beside me as I was linking in with them.

A few years later whilst trying an exercise on psychic development within a group, I suddenly became aware of a West Highland Terrier standing beside me.

When I told the man I was partnered with, he burst out crying, as it was his dog. The dog then showed me lots of images, which I relayed... and they were all spot on!

From that moment, I have always given animals their chance to come through during readings and give as much information as they are able to.

I'll be honest: they are sometimes more chatty than people and will often lighten the energy in the room for humans then to come through.

Further back, when I was ten years old, I had a very vivid dream. During it, all the animals and pets we had who'd passed over let me know that they were well, healthy and happy, and in the same place where we will all go.

I remember telling my mum the next day that we would see them all again, but it was not until I was eighteen that I entered a Spiritualist church and saw a demonstration of mediumship for the first time.

Many years later, after studying various therapies, healing and mediumship, I am almost a full-time medium and now realise it was always going to be my path. Here is just one of my stories.

I was in the middle of a reading. The young woman in front of me sat quite composed as I relayed information from a dearly loved brother who had passed over a year before from a tragic accident.

He made it clear that he was well and still very much part of the family's life by giving information of their daily activities to prove he had been with them. I was aware how calm his sister was as he spoke of personal experiences and she confirmed the evidence he was giving.

Out of the corner of my eye, I became aware of another presence right beside her, nestled close to her leg. I could see a brown goose – a gander to be precise.

This bird made it very clear to me that he wanted her to know he was there. I rather sheepishly said there was a gander standing right beside her and that was it – all composure shot out of the window and she was in tears.

This extraordinary bird relayed a vast amount of information the same way a person does with images, feelings and words, not honks!

He spoke of spending much of his life indoors with her, that he had no interest in other geese and would sit on the settee cuddled up to her.

The gander added that he would have a paddle in the bath and go out for car drives. He spoke of a dog with which he was friends. The sitter verified all of this information.

The bird let me know the grief his passing caused to her and added that nothing could have been done to save him. He was a wonderful character with a sense of humour and an absolute love for this lady.

Once the reading came to an end, the sitter said that the weight of his passing had lifted from her and how excited she felt to know he was all right.

She left feeling happier and more uplifted than when she walked in and now knew that both her brother and feathered friend were very much alive and well.

Due to my childhood with animals, I feel that they find it easier to get their messages through, as they know I am willing to go with what I see and feel.

As a child, my mother was given Gale, a two-day-old cygnet to rear. This little ball of fluff stayed indoors, followed my mother everywhere and could not be separated from her. She used to lie next to mum in bed.

Gale even sat in a shopping trolley in Tesco whilst mum went shopping! Over time, she grew into a stunning swan.

Mum taught her to fly on the local reservoir by using a canoe to paddle like mad and Gale would start running to keep up.

That is another story, but my point is this: the goose mentioned before could relay information about his life because in my mind it was not daft to have one living indoors. Therefore, I didn't question what I was being given.

Animals of all species go to the same place as us. There is no question of that. They stay linked to those they have loved and are still loved, and are there to meet us when we pass over.

Given the chance, animals will communicate in the same way as our much-loved humans do when they pass over with thoughts, images and feelings. They do not need a person on the Other Side to help them communicate, as they are capable of doing it themselves.

More often than not, when someone comes for a reading I will see their animals walk or fly besides them before I notice any people. Animals have the most amazing energy and bring this to the reading with them.

They have unconditional love and have helped a person come through many times. Perhaps someone who has never communicated through a medium or was not the most communicative in life will be assisted by a much-loved pet to work it out.

I have been very fortunate to have horses show themselves, telling me stories of how their owner would cuddle them and spend ages chatting to them quietly.

Some have mentioned how their owner would sit on them bareback, still have their saddlery and rugs, and various photos of them on display.

During readings, dogs sometimes run in letting me know that they are still missed or that they prefer the photo of when they were young and that's how they want to be remembered.

Some mention that tucked in a drawer is their collar and lead, that they were buried in the garden and lovely flowers grow there, etc.

They often talk of when they had to be put to sleep and that it was the right time to do so. Dogs and cats explain that they knew they would be going over and have given their owner several days to come to terms with the idea.

Often we hold so much guilt about having our pets put down, but it can be the kindest act we give to them when they are suffering.

My horse had to be put to sleep fifteen years ago when aged only eight. As he passed over, I could see him gallop across the field looking as he had done when he was about five years of age and in perfect health.

For several days he let me know he was all right and well, and his little Shetland pony companion could still see him.

All these years later, Stubby will stand close to me and send images of his friend in the other world. He has not forgotten him.

There are many times when animals we share our lives with are closer to us than the people around us.

Sometimes the only friend a person has is their animal companion. The loss of this can be as heartbreaking and painful as the death of a relative.

There can also be such a heavy weight of guilt surrounding their passing, which adds to the grief. Happily, this can be lifted once an animal has had the opportunity to communicate their love and relay their messages. ■
